Hot Takoyaki and Fireworks

Linked to: Student's Book pp. 103–104 – Chef Civan at the food festival and Özgür's food report from Sweden

BEFORE YOU READ Do you like food festivals? What street food did you try last summer?

From: Hana Sato
To: Elif Yıldız
Subject: Hot takoyaki and fireworks!

Hi Elif,

Thank you for your email and the photo of Pamuk. She looks so fluffy! Is she staying with Maya while you're in Gaziantep? Last Saturday, my family and I visited the summer festival in our neighbourhood in Osaka. Summer festivals are an old tradition in Japan. Lots of people wear a yukata, a light cotton kimono. I wore my blue one with white flowers, and my little brother Kenta wanted one with robots on it, of course!

There were food stalls on both sides of the street. First, we tried takoyaki – little balls of batter with pieces of octopus inside. They are one of Osaka's most famous street foods. They looked and smelled incredible, so I didn't wait. Big mistake! They were really hot inside, and I burned my tongue. Kenta laughed so much that he nearly dropped his drink.

Next, we tasted gyoza, Japanese dumplings with meat and vegetables. They were crispy on the bottom and soft on top. After that, I ordered kakigori, a dessert of soft, snowy ice with strawberry syrup. It was perfect for my poor tongue!

The best part? My grandpa joined a takoyaki competition. He cooked forty takoyaki in ten minutes! He didn't win, but he finished second, and he smiled all evening.

Later, we watched the fireworks over the river. They were gorgeous.

At home, Grandma prepared matcha for everyone. It's a traditional Japanese green tea. It tastes a bit bitter, but I love it with sweets.

Now it's your turn! You arrived in Gaziantep last weekend, didn't you? And your cooking workshop started on Monday, didn't it? Please send me photos – and your grandma's homemade mantı recipe, too! Say hi to your mum and dad!

Street Food Around the World

Linked to: Student's Book p. 108 – Ready to Explore: capitals and cuisines of Türkiye, Sweden, Belgium, Spain and England

BEFORE YOU READ What street food can you buy in your town? Which one is your favourite?

> Turunç Times · School Magazine · Culture Corner
> by Elif Yıldız, 6-B

This summer, I joined an international children's cooking workshop in Gaziantep. Children from many countries were there, and we talked about street food all week! Back home in Antalya, Mum and I checked the facts in books and online. So, let's travel around the world – no passport needed!

Türkiye – Ankara is the capital, and people speak Turkish. A famous street snack is simit, a ring of bread with sesame seeds on top. It is crunchy outside and soft inside, and you can buy it almost everywhere. And Gaziantep? In 2015, UNESCO named it a Creative City of Gastronomy – a city of great food!

Belgium – My new friend Lucas comes from Brussels, the capital of Belgium. The country has three official languages: Dutch, French and German. Belgium is famous for its waffles. They are warm, sweet and crispy, and people often eat them with sugar, chocolate or fruit.

India – Priya, another friend from the workshop, is from India. Its capital is New Delhi, and people speak many languages there, for example Hindi and English. A favourite street snack is the samosa, a triangle-shaped pastry with spicy potatoes and peas inside. Cooks fry samosas in hot oil, and people often eat them with sweet and sour sauces called chutneys.

China – Beijing is the capital of China, and people speak Chinese. Dumplings are a traditional dish there: small pieces of dough with meat or vegetables inside. You can buy them at food stalls, and many families in the north of China make them together for the Chinese New Year.

Did you know? In the 1600s, the Ottoman traveller Evliya Çelebi described the food and traditions of many nations in his book, Seyahatname. Maybe he was the world's first food blogger!

The Volcano Salsa

Linked to: Student's Book p. 109 – picture strip story: Kaan is back from Spain, Mary's İstanbul trip and Atlas in the TRNC

BEFORE YOU READ Imagine you are at a cooking workshop with children from other countries. Which dish do you cook for them?

International Children's Cooking Workshop · Gaziantep · Final Day

Panel 1 – It was the last day of the cooking workshop. Every child prepared a favourite dish for the final competition. Chef Halil, a local chef, was the judge. Mum, Dad and Mustafa watched, and Emre took photos.

Chef Halil Welcome! This kitchen looks like a pop-up market today. Remember, there's a competition for the Best Dish of the Week!

Priya Elif, you made mantı, didn't you?

Elif Yes! Grandma Nermin taught me her recipe on a video call last night. Mantı are tiny Turkish dumplings with garlic yoghurt and butter with red pepper on top.

Lucas Wait for my dish – Lucas's Volcano Salsa! I love Mexican food, so I made a dip with tomatoes, onions and chilli peppers. I followed a recipe from the internet.

Priya And here's my mango lassi, a cold yoghurt drink from India. In my family, it's a summer tradition.

Panel 2 – The chef tasted every dish.

Chef Halil Elif, you learned this from your grandma, didn't you? It's delicious, and it tastes homemade! And Priya, your lassi is cold and flavourful.

Panel 3 – Then the chef put a big spoonful of Volcano Salsa in his mouth. His face turned red, and his eyes watered.

Chef Halil Water… WATER, please!

Mum hurried over with a glass of water, but it didn't help.

Elif Lucas, you added a lot of chilli, didn't you?

Lucas Well… the recipe said a quarter of a teaspoon. I read 'four teaspoons'!

Priya Quick, Chef! Drink some lassi. Yoghurt helps with spicy food.

Mustafa Emre, may I taste the salsa now?

Emre Not today, little brother!
